Bono joining Cremades

José Bono

José Bono, former president of the Congress of Deputies, has joined the advisory board of Cremades & Calvo-Sotelo. Bono returns to practice after spending 32 years working in Spain's PSOE party, including a time as Minister of Defence in Zapatero's first government.

He will focus on administrative law issues, such as expropriations, liability and executions, and also with the regulated industries department, which deals with telecoms, energy and infrastructure, among others.

"Bono's addition to the firm's advisory council is in line with the firm's strategic aim of incorporating the best professionals and talent," says Javier Cremades, the President of Cremades & Calvo-Sotelo.

This latest addition follows a trend of law firms incorporating politicians into their offices. Indeed, the Cremades's Advisory Board is chaired by Josep Piqué, a former Minister in the PP and Chairman of Vueling PP. Other members of the advisory board include President of Campsa – José Luis Díaz Fernández, President of Iberia – Fernando Conte, and President of Hewlett-Packard Spain – Juan Soto.

Linking with Barona

Juan Barona, the highly recognised banking and restructuring lawyer, is joining Linklaters as a Partner in its Spanish banking practice.

Barona, a former Partner at Allen & Overy in Madrid for seven years, has been an adviser in some of the banking sector's most significant transactions.

This high profile Madrid hire comes despite the backdrop of the firm's global partnership restructuring last year. Allen & Overy's Madrid office now has nine partners and the move brings Linklaters' to 13.

"Our banking practice, and the Madrid office as a whole, has enjoyed significant success over the last few years," says Sebastián Albella, Linklaters Senior Partner for Spain. "The addition of Juan to our team is the result of this success."

Indeed, clients from 176 of Spain's biggest companies recently chose Barona as the recent winner of Iberian Lawyer's Gold Award for Individual Lawyer Excellence 2012 for providing a service of distinction.
